THE BACTERIA PROVISIONS

The Bacteria Provisions, if adopted, would apply to fresh, estuarine, and marine waters; include Escherichia coli (E. coli) as the indicator of pathogens in freshwater and enterococci as the indicator for estuarine waters and ocean waters; establish a risk protection level of 32 illnesses per 1,000 recreators ~~(except for Lake Tahoe)~~; and include new bacteria water quality objectives

FELICIA MARCUS, CHAIR | EILEEN SOBECK, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR for the protection of the water contact recreation (REC-1) beneficial use. The Bacteria Provisions also include several implementation approaches the State Water Board or the Regional Water Quality Control Boards (collectively, Water Boards) may utilize to achieve the bacteria water quality objectives or to reflect whether the REC-1 beneficial use is appropriately designated. The Bacteria Provisions provide that when the Water Boards develop a TMDL to achieve the bacteria water quality objectives, a reference system/antidegradation approach or a natural source exclusion approach may be utilized to account for natural sources of bacteria. Part 3 of the ISWEBE (and not the Ocean Plan Amendment) contains a temporary high-flow suspension approach and a seasonal suspension approach the Water Boards may utilize to reflect the attainability of REC-1 beneficial use designations; and Part 3 of the ISWEBE (and not the Ocean Plan Amendment) contains a definition for the limited water contact recreation (LREC-1) beneficial use and provides that a Water Board may designate a water body or a waterbody segment in a water quality control plan with the LREC-1 beneficial use. In addition, the Bacteria Provisions identify the existing federal regulatory mechanism for adopting water quality standards variances for pollutants and waterbodies.
