That's it, boys and girls. Just keep stealing water from the very people who need that water for employment and the vital need of producing food for California, the nation and the world. Keep telling yourself that avoiding the real problem of fixing the Delta will somehow justify this naked water grab. And when the farmers in this area are out of business, which is your primary goal, you can learn the hard way that the food in your grocery stores just doesn't magically appear. Maybe you'll learn to eat concrete. And when all those Bay Area people are howling about all that water they used to get but now they don't because you stole it you'll have some clever answer ready, but I really doubt it. The best part of this is stupid decisions always have consequences as you are about to learn.
